IDAHO FALLS - One of the area's nicest golf courses got a visit Saturday from one of Idaho's most well known people.

Governor Butch Otter joined other local dignitaries including Congressman Mike Simpson for a day on the links at Idaho Falls Country Club.

Governor Otter and First Lady Lori Otter were on hand as part of a fundraiser golf tournament benefiting the Idaho Meth Project.

"People enjoy playing golf, the camaraderie and the socialization, but they also know the importance of helping stop meth and that's what their contributions will go toward," said Governor Otter.

While the Governor did not tee off due to an old shoulder injury, he said he would hit the links next year.

"I just barely started roping again with my one bad shoulder, but it's my other shoulder that's bothering me now, but possibly next year," he said.

Officials say the event raised more than $60,000 to help fight meth distribution and addiction in Idaho.
